

GROUNDBREAKING NEW PIANO METHOD FOR SENIORS

Thousands of seniors are achieving their lifelong dream of learning to play piano using a groundbreaking new piano method, featured on the BBC..

For the first time ever, absolute beginners can play recognisable songs on the piano within days. Students like Mike (aged 79) from Surrey, was able to play songs on piano very quickly.

The multitude of seniors who have replicated this success finally puts paid to the myth that you have to be young to learn piano. Indeed, Mike is a spring chicken compared to many other students, such as Harry (aged 90) and Jean (93) who were also playing songs.

This new approach (called 'DecPlay') is also accessible for students who have challenges, including arthritis, low sight and memory loss.

DecPlay founder Declan Cosgrove explained:

"I'm constantly inspired by our student's motivation to learn piano. It's amazing to witness the moment when someone who has spent a lifetime believing they weren't musical, discovers that they can play piano. As well as being great fun, it's heart-warming to experience the transformations in health and wellbeing that playing music brings."

“

Pam (aged 60) from Wales outlined her experiences:

“Within weeks I found the flexibility in my hands improved significantly and an unexpected benefit is the arthritis pain has reduced so much that I don't take any anti-inflammatories now.”

”

For a number of students, the motivation to learn piano is to pass on a legacy of music to their grandchildren. When Steve from California retired, he set out to learn piano, to encourage his grandchildren to play. Within days of learning the DecPlay formula, he was having family sing songs and within weeks, three generations of his family were playing piano!

Many people would love to play their favourite songs on piano, but struggle with reading music 'notation,' which is a complex language of dots and lines. This often causes students to give up piano lessons and wrongly think that they aren't 'musical.' DecPlay removes this barrier by replacing notation with an intuitive and simple language that beginners can understand in minutes. Building upon methods used by musicians such as Paul McCartney, this new approach is so unique and effective, it has been awarded a patent.

Community features such as live group Zoom calls give students the opportunity to make new friends and share the joy of learning with others.

This new approach certainly seems to be popular, with over 10,000 seniors subscribing to DecPlay in the last few months and an incredible 97% of students giving a maximum 5 stars rating on Trustpilot, making DecPlay the highest-rated piano course anywhere on the internet. Students' comments about how this piano course has been life changing, are truly heart-warming and can be seen HERE

You can try the DecPlay method yourself, learn how to obtain an affordable keyboard and play your first song, by watching the free video lesson HERE